

Research into Staff Perceptions of Employability

What is it?

The project aims to research examine the following areas:

- How course planning teams responded to the employability framework in 2004-2005 course planning process.
- An overview of how institutional processes impact on this process.
- An identification of support received and suggested support needed
- Any potential barriers to embedding and enhancing employability

What is involved?

- Collation and initial analysis of selected programme specifications
- Interviews with course team members
- Interview with USP members
- Final report and overview paper to Academic board

Why is the project important to the CETL and the University?

If the CETL is to achieve its objectives and become an agent of change then it must understand staffs perceptions of employability and what barriers they face. Once these types of things have been uncovered the work of the CETL will become more effective.

What do you hope the project will achieve?

Understanding of how course planning teams responded to the employability framework in 2004-2005 course planning process

An overview of how institutional processes impact on this process

Identification of how institutional processes can support and enhance the embedding of employability

An understanding of how the USP contributes to this process

Future Developments

It is hoped that practically-based or research-oriented projects will be identified.
